DAILY RECORD-UNION

MONDAY APRIL 23, 1888

The RECORD-UNION is the only paper on the coast, outside of San Francisco, that receives the full Associated Press dispatches from all parts of the world. Outside of San Francisco, it has no competitor, in point of number, in its home and general circulation throughout the coast.

SAN FRANCISCO AGENCIES.

The paper is for sale at the following places: P. Fisher, Room 21, Merchants' Exchange; it is also Sole Advertising Agent for San Francisco, Grizzly Bear, Ferry and Junction of Market and Montgomery Street News Stands. Large amount of news in Translating and coming into Sacramento.

ANOTHER SCHOOL PROPOSITION.

At the recent session of the State Medical Society, Dr. Widney read a paper, in which he contended for the introduction of the study of medicine in a certain and limited degree into the public schools. He insisted that children should at least be taught, and every one know how to treat simple complaints. The members of the convention who discussed the paper are said to have concurred in the views advanced.

The disposition to run to the schools with new ideas to be engrossed upon the course of study is a very dangerous one, and as a rule ought to be combated. Whenever we discover a lack of knowledge or proficiency among the people, the first suggestion is to apply the remedy through the free schools. Thus it comes about that educators are constantly engaged in resisting the effort to overload the curriculum of common school study. They have not been entirely successful in this State. In one county certain mechanical trades have been tacked upon the school system. In another the attempt is made to teach schoolgirls housewife arts that they ought to acquire at home; in others sewing has been introduced into the schools. In some parts the lathe and the tool-chest is brought into the school-room, in others still other foreign "attachments" are made to the regular and absolutely necessary course.

All this—here and there in an exceptional case—ought to be stoutly resisted, and trades relegated to trade and manual training schools. The aim should be to give pupils in the common schools as thorough an understanding as the time will admit of essential fundamentals, no matter what the after calling is to be; to develop the intellect and fit the child fairly well to use the knowledge imparted in mathematics, the use of the English tongue, and in those essentials of general knowledge that will serve him to purpose if he proves no further in a scholastic course, or will qualify and invite him to enter upon higher educational courses. In the great majority of cases the pupils in our grammar schools now have as many studies to pursue as they can follow with benefit and safety; the addition of new ones cripples the intellectual and threatens physical capacity.

But when all this is said, we confess that the proposition of the medical society has force and makes a strong case for itself. Physiology is now taught in the schools, in a general sort of a way; quite as much, probably as is feasible. We can understand how something of the commonplace of medicine could be advantageously added and without involving the study of chemistry. Thus, there is reason why children should be taught with method "what to do while waiting for the doctor"; how to stop effusion of blood; to restore a fainting person; to manipulate one nearly drowned; to treat one who has taken a common poison; what to do in cases of common accidents, as burning, limb breaking, incised wounds, etc. We can understand how greatly beneficial it is to children in grammar grades to be instructed in the ordinary use and effects of certain common medicines; the dangers of opium; the effects of alcoholic stimulants upon the human system; and to be taught concerning the use and misuse of certain foods and beverages. But if the proposition is as reported by our San Francisco contemporaries, "how to properly treat simple complaints, in which the services of a physician are hardly necessary," then dangerous ground is approached. Who is to ever be determined what a simple complaint is? or what simple ailment can be treated safely by one inexperienced? or that what is supposed to be a simple, may not in fact be the precursor of a serious one?

What, too, shall be deemed regular and safe in this day and age of schools of medicine and division of opinion as to what is proper treatment in even the lesser of bodily ills, outside of simple external wounds, or bruises, laceration of the flesh, etc? In the use of simple remedial agencies what shall be the standard for teaching? Which of the many schools of healers shall be taken and which discarded in teaching children "how to properly treat simple complaints?"

The subject is one fraught with the danger of contention if introduced into the school curriculum, and while it is certainly desirable that every one should know something of simple surgery, have knowledge of the human anatomy, and understand what antidotes to administer in poisoning, what dangers to avoid in the use of food, it is extremely doubtful if "treatment of even simple complaints" should be taught in the schools. The danger of displacing other studies, of giving that "smattering" of knowledge that is always damaging of creating pernicious self-confidence in the use of remedial agents, should command very serious pause before attaching medicine as a study to common school courses. The more the question is examined the more it will develop as an unwise scheme.

OVER-GROWTH.

It is stated, as an incident to the collocated boom in Southern California, that fourteen restaurants closed their doors in one day in the city of San Diego. The reason for closing these restaurants is not so far to seek as that for opening them in the first place. The boom at San Diego was quite as uncontrollable as a panic. For a long time its symptoms were identical with those of real madness. To fully illustrate the absurdity of the growth which for two years set up in that town, let it be stated that in the two years of that delirious growth San Diego increased its population from 3,000 to 18,000, or, if the claim of the San Diegans themselves be admitted, to 25,000. Taking the former figure, however, as approximately correct, it will be seen that, without corresponding growth in the supporting country, the city of San Diego multiplied its growth by six in two years. This extraordinary expansion was due to a belief in the future of the city. The relation between urban populations and the supporting country is naturally supplemental. It is like the pressure of a fluid in two ends of a pipe—necessarily equal.

Sacramento to be 30,000, let us suppose that by reason of some popular belief in the future of the city it had in the past two years increased this population by six, and had to-day 180,000 people, from whence would this large population derive a support? Or, suppose the population of Sacramento to be 30,000, let us suppose that by reason of some popular belief in the future of the city it had in the past two years increased this population by six, and had to-day 180,000 people, from whence would this large population derive a support?

LEONARD DENOUNCED.

The Chico Enterprise editorially says:

"Colonel Woodford is in his usual conspicuous outside of the editorials he uses, and we think his influence here has caused him to make us write about him,"

Mr. McKim of the Chico Enterprise, who called at that establishment and in the course of conversation denounced the Enterprise and using the word "liar."

This is very preposterous for a newspaper to do, and it is their privilege, so long as they do not interfere with other people's observance of the Christian Sabbath. This is one of the beauties of our benevolent Government."

THEIR DEFEND THEIR ACTION.

The following card appeared in the Chico Enterprise Saturday evening:

It is charged in the press of this city and in a private letter to the Sacramento Bee that the Colonels characterized the Holy excursionists as hoodlums and scoundrels.

We, the undersigned, have been present at several of the Colonels' meetings, and referring to the excursions, used that term of abuse in their reports. On the contrary, Colonel Woodford speaks of them as a sufficient amount of money is raised by Freeland and Willow slough will be completed this summer.

A correspondent says: "The work of graveling the adobe road in District No. 12 (Freeport and Sacramento road) is progressing finely. The gravel is obtained from the Sacramento Valley and Placer Railroad Company, near Folson, and is milled-washed gravel of good quality.

The Colonels' road department does the graveling.

The temperature in this city yesterday, according to the Signal Service report, was slightly cooler. The average for the day was 70° cooler than the average of Saturday and 3° warmer than the normal.

The highest and lowest temperature was 60° and 20°. The prevailing direction of the wind was southerly, and the weather was clear.

The Sacramento Mail says: "The delegation of Washington State, Mr. R. W. King, went to Sacramento Thursday evening to confer with the members in that city, returned yesterday. They feel assured that the Sacramento Post will be well represented at the coming session. The reports that come from the other Posts of Northern California are equally encouraging."
